We've got a match!

Katherine set for transplant next month

KATHERINE Sinfield thought the day doctors told her they had found her a bone marrow donor would never come.

However, the wife of News Telegraph editor Stephen is now only weeks away from undergoing the lifesaving procedure.

She said: "Being told you have a donor match is a huge sense of relief. It is the light at the end of a very long tunnel as it signals a major turning point."

"I know that I have weeks of hospital treatment ahead of me and I know that, at times, the transplant can make you extremely ill. However, at least I have a goal to aim for now."

"Without this person coming forward, my future looked bleak."

Following Katherine's diagnosis earlier this year, the News Telegraph launched its Take Five Minutes campaign in a bid to increase the number of blood and bone marrow donors.

Stephen said: "Katherine and myself worried about different aspects of her care. I was really frightened that she would come out of the chemotherapy sessions without a donor and so all of the treatment would be fruitless."

"We would both like to thank every new donor who came forward to help save Katherine."
